With almost 100,000 New Zealanders taking a cruise in 2016, it's clear that cruising is fast becoming a popular holiday choice for Kiwi travellers. So why is this? Well simply put, cruising over the past 20 years, undergone a 'Madonna Esque' reinvention of itself, creating floating master-pieces that cater to the modern lifestyle we love, yet giving us an escape from the every-day stresses we face while seeing the world...one port at a time.

Everyone seems to be cruising; your neighbours, your friends and your work mates. So maybe it is your turn, and with the vast choice of ships on offer the opportunity to find one that fits your lifestyle, expectations and budget are better than ever.

To the converted, you know and love cruising with a passion, booking your next cruise as soon as you return from the last. To the unconverted and sceptical, let us take you on a journey where you wake up somewhere new every day of your holiday, your days are packed full of adventure or relaxation... the choice is yours, you are pampered from dawn to dusk, where the restaurants onboard rival any found on land, the entertainment world class and where the inclusions and value for money far outweigh a land based holiday.

You are not too young to cruise, you won't be bored, but you may become addicted!

A Serial Cruiser's Top Picks

When people discover the extent of my cruise travels around the world, the first question they always ask is "which is your favourite?" How do you answer that? Not only is it so hard to whittle down, I believe every destination offers something unique and attractive in its own way. Here are my top 5 highlights!

Norwegian Coast - Imagine slowly gliding through twisting, narrow passages onboard your cruise ship while viewing small communities nestled beneath majestic landscapes. This itinerary rates as my number one cruise destination as it's the perfect combination of cruise and land experience. Each town and city is unique, while the cruising is serene. Crown the itinerary at the remote port of Longyearbyen on the island of Svalbard and you have spent a week or two gaining an appreciation of the best of nature's beauty on this planet.

Reykjavik, Iceland - You may still not be able to spell it after your visit, but you will remember it forever as it is one of the most unique geological landscapes on this planet. Being so isolated is also why it's probably one of the most underestimated destinations, though the city is rich with cosmopolitan living and the discoveries that start on the Golden Route led me to some of the best adventures I've ever taken part in.

New England, North America - Starting from New York and working your way up the East Coast, a mix of big metropolises (New York, Boston, Quebec, Montreal) are blended with small towns (Newport, Bar Harbour, Halifax) which when combined with the odd day at sea, makes it a diverse, fresh cruise. Highlights of course include the foliage change in the fall, through to old fishing ports and villages which give it a boutique feeling amongst world-class cities.

Stockholm, Sweden - Apart for my love of Stockholm itself, one of the great reasons to make sure this city is part of your cruise itinerary is the incredible sail-in (or sailing out). You have to cruise for 3 hours through an archipelago of 30,000 islands and islets, a journey that is absolutely breathtaking as you pass the summer cottages of Swedish residents, all unique in their character on small islands that often house just one wooden dwelling. Stockholm is a mix of old and contemporary, parks and playgrounds, fresh markets and great shopping malls - all within a matrix of canals and waterways. If you could only do one tour, try the hot air balloon over the city, there's nothing else like it.

Florence (Livorno), Italy - So many attractions lay within close proximity in this enchanting city. From the Academia where Michelangelo's David stands centre-piece, to the Duomo and Santa Croce where leather goods are aplenty, to the world renowned Uffizi Gallery and next door the Ponte Vecchio bridge. In between are small piazzas to grab an espresso or gelato, surrounded by top brand outlets.

Cruising Close to Home

Imagine waking up to sun kissed beaches, palm trees waving as you step on shore to spend the day exploring or just relaxing. Discover islands you might not get to otherwise as you spend a week (or more) island hopping and tasting the best of our tropical back yard.

A cruise of the South Pacific is like experiencing a smorgasbord of sights, sounds and tastes – a little sample of the best our neighbouring islands have to offer without the hassle of travelling between them all under your own steam. You'll spend each day in new, tropical locations and cruise overnight to the next port.

The beauty of this type of itinerary is not only that this "tasting platter" will help you decide which places to add to your bucket list to come back to another time, but that you unpack only once and explore at your leisure.

One day you might play in the gin clear water of Tahiti's Bora Bora, the next visit capital city Papeete and pick up some black pearls – or even hit the seconds factory and select a pearl to be made into a small memento. The island of Rangiroa has some of the best reef snorkelling in the world where the corals are blazing with colour and if you quietly float over head you'll actually hear the fish nibbling.

In Vanuatu the remote, pink tinged sand in the shape of a glass at Champagne Beach on Espiritu Santo comes alive with colourful handicrafts that the local villagers set up on ship visit days. On the mainland, Port Vila's waterfront has had a complete multi-million dollar makeover and is now a two-kilometre stretch of walkway linking beach bars, cafes, water sports activity operators and the new Mama's Market with the old produce market.

If you cruise between April and June in Vanuatu, you should add the island of Pentecost to your itinerary where the famous land diving – the early version of bungee jumping – originated. It only occurs at this time of year when the vines are pliable and also coincides with the annual yam harvest, although the origins of the daring feat that is only done by men are said to have had a saucy beginning. The story goes that a young woman ran from her husband's amorous advances and escaped up a banyan tree. He raced up after her, so she tied two vines to her ankles and leapt off. He leapt off without the ropes and plunged to his death. The men perform the jump to show they will never be tricked again. Today a good jump means a bountiful yam harvest as well as being considered extremely manly!

If New Caledonia is on your itinerary, you'll be amazed when you step onto the white sands of Kuto Beach on the Isle of Pines. It is so soft it feels like walking on talcum powder and even squeaks under your feet! There's a fascinating French colonial history here too with a crumbled down prison that the French prisoners sent here built themselves and which could possibly become a venue for open air markets and other outdoor events if some of the locals have their way. It is here that the sandalwood tree is farmed for use in perfumes and essential oils and you'll find hidden pristine lagoons ready to splash into.

Capital city Noumea is a taste of France in the South Pacific. Head into town and find bakeries laden with warm croissants and pain au chocolat, try French red wine in a restaurant on the waters' edge or just buy a wedge of gooey cheese from the supermarket to picnic on the beach.

A little further from home, yet not too far, is Asia and all the culturally rich experiences that await. These itineraries are sought after by those who want to wake up to exotic landscapes dotted with historical sites and head out to explore the flavours of everything from cosmopolitan cities to ancient temples and wats, river ways and local shopping and dining.

Start your cruise in Hong Kong or Singapore and plan to arrive a couple of days early – or stay on for a few days at the end – to do some shopping in night markets, malls and neighbourhoods where local designers showcase their work.

Cruise between Singapore and Hong Kong for a taste of Vietnam, or choose a round trip from Singapore to include Malaysia and Thailand. Start in Hong Kong for cruises to China and Japan. Or even fly to Shanghai and cruise to Hong Kong.

Cruises are ideal for visiting places you've never been to. Take an excursion provided by the ship or just potter around and people watch, riding in a tuk tuk or wandering a waterfront, like the Bund in Shanghai, and drinking in the zest of a new city.

If you like a historical sites, the Cu Chi war tunnels in Vietnam's Ho Chi Minh City are a sobering reminder of the 1960s Vietnam War and visitors who don't mind cramped spaces can crawl through them.

Twirl in circles under the confetti of the cherry blossom trees in springtime Japan. Snorkel around the limestone islands of the Philippines. Walk in the rainforests of Malaysia. Take a moment at a temple. Swim on a remote island in Thailand. Learn to cook with local cuisines. Barter with merchants at the markets. Enjoy sunset on your balcony or slip into the pool at the end of a day and allow the memories to settle forever.

Cruising the Americas

Cuba

New Zealanders have always been welcome in Cuba, but obviously getting there for us was difficult as we had to book flights via a Caribbean island or Mexico and as for cruise ships, well no US-based ships have visited for 40 years.

But all that has changed with the relaxing of the embargo which has meant American tourists are pouring into Cuba like All Blacks fans at a test match. But with their new found excitement and exuberant selfies comes a strain on infrastructure and there are simply not enough hotels to keep pace. The solution? A cruise to Cuba.

In 2016 the first cruise ships from Miami began to float in, docking in the heart of Havana at the Plaza de San Francisco and opening up a whole new photogenic world for those who love music, culture, history and a whole lot of fun.

Travelling on any of the cruise lines that now overnight or offer itineraries around the whole island means the bothersome issue of your accommodation has been solved.

The second plus of cruising to Cuba is the food. Cuba is not known for its dining scene – unless beans and rice is your thing. So to have the choice, as a cruise passenger, of whether you eat on board or visit a local restaurant is yours.

But don't miss the restaurants, cafes and bars of Havana. This is where the gold is. Live music and lobster for lunch is an experience you'll never forget. That and bowls of plantain chips at El Floridita sitting at the bar next to the bronze bust of Ernest Hemingway joining the cigar smokers – or just breathing in their vapour.

Right next to the cruise terminal is a huge art market to pick up a painting of a 1960s or buy some little souvenirs to bring home.

Havana is a photo op around every corner. Take a walking tour with a guide, then allow a few hours to get lost down side streets or take a ride in an old Chevy for a hour to Revolution Square for a good look around.

Alaska

There is so much to see from the ship when cruising to Alaska, that for this reason alone, the 49th state formerly owned by Russia until the US bought it in 1867, is worth putting on your cruise Bucket List.

Whether you start from Seattle or Vancouver, you'll sail up the Inside Passage to the spectacular 34-km long Margerie Glacier at the end of one of the finger-like inlets of Glacier Bay National Park where at almost zero knots the captain will pull a slow donut as you stand on the decks admiring the blue-white of the glacier. It's not until you see some kayakers or seals or even a whale in the waters below that you realise just how big this wall of ice is – 1.6 km long and over 70 metres above sea level.

You may also hear it crack under the constant pressure of the trickling movement. It echoes like a gunshot, then before your eyes it will calve off and crash into the sea, barely missing those crazy kayakers that came from goodness-knows-where and leaving pieces of ice bobbing around them in the sea.

But before you get to the glacier the captain will have dragged you from your book with announcements of frolicking whales and where best to go on the ship to see them. That's what makes an Alaskan cruise so remarkable. And that's before you hit the cute little seaside towns of Juneau, Skagway, Sitka or Ketchikan selling fur hats and Russian dolls and where excursions include husky dog sledding and flight-seeing trips to watch bears walk out of the woods near a salmon hatchery and catch their lunch.

Caribbean

A Caribbean cruise simply smacks of a good time. Think cocktails with umbrellas in them sitting on deck under a big blue sky day. And if your ship has an outdoor movie screen (most do these days) and a pool with a ridiculous slide that whizzes semi-clad passengers squealing down a tube or perhaps even a wave pool to practice surfing, a rock wall to climb or an ice rink to skate on, then your sea days will pass all too quickly.

Typically these cruises of eastern or western Caribbean set off from Miami or Fort Lauderdale and again, a Caribbean cruise is just a taster. A medley of sights and sounds; merging Mexico with Jamaica, the Cayman Islands with Belize, St Kitts and Antigua. There are several ships and even more itineraries in the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea to choose from, so your decision will come down to places you have on your Bucket List, or maybe simply your calendar.

Some islands boast waterfalls and rainforests, others long white beaches and tiki bars with reggae music that you can't help but move to. Coral coasts with great snorkelling and diving or excursions that include the cruise line's own private beach. Swim with stingrays in Grand Cayman, climb a waterfall in Jamaica, zip-line in St Lucia, kayak in Cozumel, or just spend the day lazing on a stunning beach with that cocktail.

Families are well catered for on board with exceptional kids clubs on larger ships, and plenty of activities for all ages, giving them an experience they'll never forget with your kids holding morning talks at school for weeks!

Magic in the Mediterranean

The Mediterranean is one of the most fascinating and accessible stretches of ocean to cruise in. Edged with long popular beaches and hidden rocky peninsulas, flavoured with charm and character, unique tastes and incredible historic sights, this region is on the bucket list of every cruise lover for good reason.

As countries stand side by side, dotted with several major cities from which to start an ocean voyage, the choice comes down to which destinations you want to explore, and what sort of onboard experience you're after.

You could choose a round trip from say Barcelona to Barcelona, or a one way cruise ending in Rome or Venice and spend a few days on your own before flying on from there.

Themed cruises are a great way to focus on your interests, like an antiquities cruise taking in ancient sites like Apollo's Temple, Pompeii and Olympia where the first Olympic Games were held and the original stone starting blocks are still in place for a selfie. You'll learn how the men competed naked and when women were allowed to compete, they had one breast showing.

They say Rome wasn't built in a day, and only having one day on a cruise to uncover this jewel filled with jaw-dropping historical sites and long tales is almost cruel. But it's here you might choose to come back to for a few days when your cruise is over and use your one day to seek out the best of the best. The port of Rome is about an hour's drive away at Civitavecchia, so taking a ship excursion is the most convenient way to get in and out – and of course if you get delayed on an official tour, the ship will wait for you. If you go on your own, you might see it disappearing into the sunset as you dash to the airport to catch it at the next port!

But you can also just take an official ship transfer to the city and spend your own time wandering around, sampling the pizza, pasta and gelato and generally people-watching and market shopping. However if it's your first visit, or the Colosseum and the Sistine Chapel are on your must-sees, then book ahead – either with the ship or with a specialised land operator in Rome through your helloworld agent – to ensure you don't wait hours in a line.

Florence is so picturesque, on a day here you may want to take a walking tour, then spend a couple of hours getting lost in the little side streets, buying art from a street vendor and enjoying a glass of chianti on the riverside.

If you stop at Kusadasi, Turkey, it's up to you whether you choose a ship excursion or just potter around on your own by hiring a driver for a few hours, but a visit to Ephesus is the highlight here. You will sit in the amphitheatre that the apostle Paul taught from, and to whom the book of Ephesians was written for, and stroll the wide stone streets with a huge stone library at the end, imagining life in a distant time.

Barcelona is another city that to try and see in a day would be like speed eating a nine-course degustation. But there are some highlights that you can explore on your own, like strolling along Las Ramblas and getting lost in the Gothic Quarter. You'll see a few of Gaudi's buildings here, but to really see his work, head out to Park Guell and sit on the mosaic tiled bench that slithers around the edge. But to take a short guided tour here will unravel so much more, including what Gaudi built under the park!

A tip for Barcelona is to pre-book (through the ship excursion desk on board) tickets to get inside the phenomenal Sagrada Familia. This enormous Catholic Church was started by Gaudi in 1882 and they are hoping to have it finished some 100 years after his death in 2026, but the chances of that happening are slim. It is hugely impressive outside, but inside the stain glass windows and soaring towers are simply astonishing.

In Cannes the ships anchor off-shore and a few tender boats are lowered down to ferry passengers in and out all day. A tip here is that if you book an excursion you will be one of the first off. If you don't want to do that, either scoot down first thing and get an early ride in, or have a leisurely start over breakfast (probably to yourselves) and head in mid-morning. There is a little road train, Le Petit Train, which runs for about €10 so you can spend an hour tootling around the waterfront with headsets on listening to your English guide tell you about the city. Once it's finished you might like to walk back to the famous Cannes Film Festival theatre, or just sit and enjoy a drink on the sun drenched French Riviera.

Sicily is the largest Mediterranean island, just off the "boot" of Italy. Here you'll find the cobbled streets of Taormina with ancient Greek and Roman architecture, live music in front of cafes and wonderful views of Mt Etna. Artisans work out of their studios producing colourful ceramics, linen and lace and if you have a love of photography, you'll find a photo op around every corner.

The size of the ship matters a little on a Mediterranean cruise, as the smaller the ship, the smaller the port you can dock in. For example, a small ship can cruise through the Corinth Canal, a spectacular feat of engineering that cuts through the Greek mainland at Corinth, near Athens connecting the Saronic Gulf with the Aegean Sea. Small ships dock at Corsica too, while large ships either tender their passengers in, or leave ports like that off their itineraries.

The main factor when deciding between small or large ships is whether lots of on board entertainment and dining options is more you, versus a more intimate dining experience, higher personal attention and conversation with fewer passengers. The choice is yours!

CONNECT WITH US

Russia, Scandinavia & the Fjords

With Kiwis taking to the ocean more and more for their holidays, the trend towards Scandinavian cruises is gaining popularity. Once we've ticked the classic experiences off like the Mediterranean, Alaska, Pacific Islands and maybe even a river cruise, we want to explore the next frontier.

The Northern Lights and excursions to see polar bears are the next big thing and there are several cruise lines offering stunning itineraries to this heady part of the world. Of course seeing the astonishing aurora borealis means long dark nights following in the wake of the Vikings between November and March, but the ethereal green lights of an Arctic Circle night more than make up for it!

Delve into the Nordic culture that provides an alluring backdrop to days spent admiring fjords and architecture, walking over history and sampling local flavours.

In autumn Sweden, Denmark, Finland and Norway offer a kaleidoscope of colour as the fiery foliage decorates hillsides in scenes that wouldn't look real in a painting.

The fjords of Norway are punctuated with cascading waterfalls bouncing like ribbons down verdant mountainsides which you'll see from your ship, but the more intrepid can get amongst them by hiking or kayaking. You'll see glaciers, learn about the Vikings and hear tales of the region's royalty.

Art, museum and history lovers will be infatuated by a Scandinavian cruise following in the footsteps of rulers and artists. Visit castles, cathedrals and fortresses and take photos of heritage sites right in city centres. Take a shore excursion with a local guide to immerse yourself into the life of a city.

The long days of summer and even longer twilight hours make the perfect excuse for outdoor events with open-air festivities across the region.

Walk the medieval streets of Tallin in Estonia, art-nouveau influenced Helsinki and enjoy scenic Stockholm.

Most Baltic cruises will spend a couple of days in beautiful St Petersburg with the advantage of not going through the hassle of needing a visa, but still able to explore this cultural centre of Russia.

If you can drag yourself away from Nevsky Prospekt, the five-kilometre cultural heart of the city with its cafes, bars and restaurants, you'll want to step into the Church on the Blood, built on the spot where Alexander II was assassinated in 1881. Its classic Russian tops were deliberately designed to make an architectural mark in a city that was seen to be turning too western. But it fell into ruins for many decades, finally reopening in 1997 adorned with extravagant mosaics, many linking the crucifixion with Alexander's murder.

A day will not be long enough to get lost in the Hermitage's art collection and gaze at the works of Leonardo da Vinci, Rembrandt and Picasso. It's been said it would take 11 years to take in every piece on display. If you are staying overnight, get tickets for the ballet or opera at the Mariinsky Theatre where greats like Tchaikovsky and Nureyev have performed, and browse through the fourth largest cathedral in the world, St Isaac's Cathedral, one of the great landmarks of St Petersburg with its pure gold plated dome. If you're feeling energetic, climb the 300 steps to the gilded viewing platform for sweeping views over the city.

Copenhagen is known for its bright buildings jostling for space along the canals and waterways where a bike ride will blow the cobwebs away before ending with a beer on a long summer's day. Bask in the Tivoli Gardens and take a

Stockholm covers 14 islands so spending a day hopping around them on a sightseeing cruise is great way to fill your senses with what its like to be Swedish. Visit the Nobel Museum in the Old Town, pop into local cafes and hunt out souvenirs like a rare book from the dealers in town.

In Oslo you can wander along the waterfront for a drink or to taste the local delicacies in cafes and restaurants as street musicians entertain you and the shops beckon. You might like to visit the Nobel Peace Centre or the Munch Museum celebrating expressionist artist Edvard Munch's work, but note; for a cheeky selfie in front of the famous painting The Scream, you'll need to visit the National Gallery.

Gaze at the gothic, baroque classic and art nouveau architecture of Latvia's Riga where the old town is a UNESCO world heritage site where old meets new as upmarket retailers make their home in restored WWII-bombed buildings.

Ride a cable car up a mountain for a 360 degree panorama view. Hear tales of tragedy and triumph, of murder and mayhem, of history being shaped to be shared for generations to come.

The most popular time of year is May to September, with June and July being the peak summer season when the white nights of the Arctic Circle mean the sky barely gets dark. But Octoberfest and the northern lights of winter are fun and fascinating times to venture this far north as Scandinavia fast becomes a leading destination for cruise lovers.
